

1 Cité Gagarine

The movie Gagarine (2020), directed by Fanny Liatard and Jérémie Trouilh, proposes a dystopian audiovisual narrative around the last days of a social housing complex in Ivry-sur-Seine, France. There, through the commitment of the local resident Youri towards the defense of his home, the film exposed the existing entanglements around a building and unveiling how isolated public policies and social housing has been developed in France, but moreover, in western cultures in general. Where networks and other relationships produced by spatial objects in the city aren't being considered for the production of space.
